

ABSTRACT

A method for managing data includes synchronizing a database on a client system in response to location information about the client system. A trigger signal is transmitted to the client system in response to an event relevant to the location information of the client system.

- 5 The trigger signal prompts the client system to present data from the database and to lock the client system.